CLAIMS

1.   In a computer system, a method of detecting device support in a graphical user interface comprising:

examining a runtime version of an element of a graphical user interface;

identifying said element as supporting a device when device-handling program code is associated with said element.